

The wind blew me to this spot, as a teeny-tiny seed.

On this spot my roots grew into a stem with four small leaves.
The world was dark, so I waited, curled up in an itty-bitty ball.

I wasn't able to see the full moon . . .
or the light of the hundreds of thousands of stars.

